Dr. McGlynn.

Several newspapers in New York are persuading themselves that the authorities of the Catholic Church must now take some severe action against Dr. McGlynn, after his recent utterances at Clarendon Hall, and they quote these paragraphs as particularly offensive:

"He who would teach that all men are not equal, that the land is not for all, that we are not one brotherhood, is a sacrilegious thief. He would rob man of what God has given him."

"These men, with their purple, their fine linen, their marble palaces, their French cooks and dainty little dinners, preach from their pulpits resignation to the poor. They tell us that poverty is good for the soul. To them the salvation of a soul is accomplished in a hovel with a mud floor and a few potatoes. This is all very fine, but let this good gentleman in his fine linen and purple and marble palace eschew his French cook and partake of the more saving meal of a few potatoes. He might save his soul better than if he lived in a palace and fared sumptuously every day. Consistency is a jewel."

"Religion shall never be right till we see a democratic pope walking down Broadway with a stove-pipe hat, frock coat and trowers, and an umbrella under his arm. In my poor opinion, that man will be the greatest of all popes."

The words "sacrilegious thief" and "the good gentleman in his fine linen and purple," it is said, are indirect attacks on the Archbishop, who must now, out of regard for his own position, "unfrook" or excommunicate the priest. It is hardly probable that Archbishop Corrigan will do either. He has suspended Dr. McGlynn, and that is probably all he will do on his own authority. And the reason for the disregard with which Dr. McGlynn's words concerning Archbishop Corrigan will be viewed by the latter, lies probably in the statement made not long ago by a priest in Baltimore. Said he:

"When we were in New York to see Cardinal Gibbons off for Rome, two of us were shown St. Stephen's Church one morning by an eminent medical gentleman, the brother of one of the leading clergymen in Baltimore. Naturally, we discussed in an algebraic informal way Dr. McGlynn's unhappy action, and I was hardly surprised when the doctor said to me: 'I have watched Dr. McGlynn's course for several years back as a medical man. Normally, his mind is one of the brightest I have ever known. But, as a medical man, I believe that Dr. McGlynn has not, for some years, been responsible for all he says and does.
And I think there are others who agree with me.' And I, for one," concluded the priest, "agree with the doctor in all he implied."

Letter from Rappahannock.

(Correspondence of the Alexandria Gazette.)

RAPPAHANNOCK Co., May 2.—Spring is with us in all its glory. The grass is nearly a foot high. The air is scented with the perfume of apple blossoms, etc. The wheat, which looked very badly a month ago, has come out all right, and from present prospects I think the farmer will have nothing to complain of on that ground, in this section, at least. Ours is a beautiful country, and no wonder that the city people want to leave the heat and dust of city life and flee, as birds, to the mountains. Nearly every house in the village was filled last summer with city boarders.

The merchants have all gone north for their goods, and will be most smiling to those who have fullest pockets for the next month or two.

Our friend, Mr. Bird Deatherage, formerly of Warren, but who, for the last three years, has been living in Minnesota, is here on a visit to his relatives, and says that Minnesota is the place for young men.

Again have we been called to the house of mourning. This time a young and promising man in the bloom of youth—James Burr Deatherage. He was esteemed and loved by all who knew him. Left at a very early age to the tender care of his maternal grandmother, who reared him in the way he should go, but, with bright prospects for the future, he was cut down by that fell disease consumption. He left the University, by advice of his physician, in February, thinking that the pure mountain air would be beneficial to him, but alas, his days were numbered, and on the 27th of April he fell asleep as quietly as a babe on his mother's breast. His devoted grandmother who has seen the snows of 84 years, took him by the hand and tenderly led him to the margin of the great river. He went without fear, "Only just across the river"—over on the other side, where his mother, with outstretched arms, welcomed her darling boy and led him to his Saviour's feet, whom he had loved so long. Who knows but that he has left the "gate ajar" for his two old grandmothers and grandfather, who are far advanced in the eighties. On the evening of the 28th, as the sun was sinking behind the beautiful blue mountains, they laid him to rest in the old family graveyard, amidst a profusion of floral offerings. EVERGREEN.
